P.L. 2007, Chapter 168 also expanded the Council’s membership from being a six-member to a fourteen-member board. The Council is comprised of a diverse group of family members, as well as a variety of health and human service, autism organization, policy and education representatives. As a collective body, the membership addresses procedural, programmatic, legislative or administrative issues affecting people with autism spectrum disorders. To facilitate the full Council’s efforts, the Council asks individual members to meet the following expectations:

A. All Members:

1. For the Council to perform its functions, each member needs to attend and actively participate in the Council’s activities. Members should also provide ongoing input and guidance on the efforts of the Council. The Council wants all of its members to be involved in developing and implementing policies.

2. To effectively address issues affecting people with autism spectrum disorders, the Council must rely on the expertise and experience of its individual members. The Council wants its members to offer technical assistance and personal insights on matters about which they possess expertise or experience.

3. To be effective, the Council needs outside persons and organizations to be aware of its activities and provide input. Accordingly, the Council wants its members to disseminate information about Council activities to persons and organizations that would benefit from...
knowledge about the Council or be able to facilitate the Council’s goals. However, individual Council members also need to ensure that information is accurately and fairly communicated to others. A Council member should be cautious in representing the Council’s positions and should only represent as the Council’s positions those positions that have been agreed to by the Council. Only the Chair and/or the Director (at the direction of the Chair), should give press interviews or issue public statements representing the Council.

Accordingly, the Council needs its members who represent agencies to inform the Council about their agencies’ policies and activities as they related to people with autism and other pervasive developmental disorders.

2. If a member who represents an agency or academic institution cannot attend a Council meeting, the Council wants that member to send an alternate, non-voting representative of the agency, if possible. This representative will not participate in the Council’s deliberations, but will be present to ensure that the absent member, and the appropriate individuals from that member’s academic institution/agency, are kept fully informed regarding the Council’s activities.

3. Members who represent agencies or academic institutions need to act as liaisons between the Council and their agencies. These members should communicate Council activities to their agencies’ administrative, operational, and governing personnel and communicate relevant activities of their agencies to the Council. This type of communication should be routine to allow the other Council members to provide input regarding the activities of the agencies and the agencies to provide input regarding the activities of the Council.

4. Although the Academic Institution members of the Council have unique interests in the area of ASDs, it is important for these members to remain cognizant of the needs and interests of all citizens of New Jersey and ensure that the Council’s policies are sound public policies for all.

C. Public Members Appointed by the Governor, Senate or General Assembly:

1. Although the public members of the Council do not officially represent any constituency, they are the public face of the Council. Accordingly, the Council wants its public members to collect information from the public regarding the Council’s activities and report it to the Council.

2. Although the public members of the Council have unique interests in the area of ASDs, it is important for these members to remain cognizant of the needs and interests of all
