Wellness

Wellness involves being aware of ourselves as whole people, including a sense of balance and comfort. It is a sense that things are going well for us today, and can continue to go well for us tomorrow. It is a sense that we have meaningful relationships and a sense of meaning and purpose. Although we may have setbacks, or experience stress, we are resilient and we have strength, material resources, and the support of others to survive and thrive.

Stress, addictions, illness, and traumatic experiences impact wellness and balance. At the Institute, we believe that helping people improve their personal wellness, as they define it, is critical.

Wellness incorporates all of the eight dimensions shown on the cover and back of this booklet. Each dimension of wellness can affect our overall quality of life, because wellness directly relates to how long we live (longevity) and how well we live (quality of life).

When we look at the eight-dimension model, our attention is drawn to the idea that all eight dimensions are connected. We all know how much they are connected in our lives. When we feel financially stressed (e.g., increasing debt), we experience emotional stress (anxiety), sometimes leading to physical problems (illness), less effectiveness at work (occupational), and maybe even questioning our own meaning and purpose in life (spiritual). When we are not working (occupational), we lose some of our opportunities to interact with others (social), cannot get the quality foods and medical care we need to stay well (physical), and may need to move to a place that feels less safe and secure (environmental).

Stress, addiction, trauma, disappointment, and loss can impact our wellness and the balance in our lives. It seems important to balance work with play and rest, to balance time out for recuperation and recovery with living our lives fully and productively, and to balance the desire for rapid change with the known effectiveness of slow changes to build good habits.
Habits are key for wellness. Our habits affect what we do, how we feel, how we work, how we fuel our minds and bodies and how we spend or save money. Habits become ingrained, and we have to work consciously to maintain or establish good habits that contribute to our wellness, our valued roles, and our personal goals. Some habits (excessive alcohol, harmful drugs or chemicals, consumption of energy drinks, sugar and fat laden foods) can have immediate or long term negative effects on physical, mental, and social well-being.

Another part of wellness is our valued roles such as friend, worker, volunteer, student, colleague, parent, spouse, and community member. These roles provide an identity, drive our daily activities, and ignite our passions.

Wellness involves a sense of empowerment. Each day we wake up we can make choices. Empowerment goes hand-in-hand with taking personal responsibility for our day to day choices and our lives.

We hope this guide will help you think about your own wellness—what you already do now (your daily routines, habits, and valued life roles and activities), what else you can do or can learn to do, and what type of supports you need to focus on your wellness and balance.

One of the things many people find helpful is to look at their own wellness in each dimension. For each of the eight dimensions that follow, record your strengths and your thoughts about areas you may want to change or improve. This wellness booklet can offer some insights to determine things you are doing well and things you may want to start or stop doing.

Please use this booklet yourself and consider sharing with co-workers or support group members so you can review, plan, and grow together. We hope this is helpful.

We wish you a successful wellness journey!

Wellness is not the absence of disease, illness, and stress but the presence\(^1\) of:

- Purpose in life
- Active involvement in satisfying work and play
- Joyful relationships
- A healthy body and living environment
- Happiness

Wellness is a conscious, deliberate process that requires being aware of and making choices for a more satisfying lifestyle.\(^2\)

A wellness lifestyle includes a self-defined balance of health habits such as sleep and rest, eating well, productivity, participation in meaningful activity, and contact with supporters.\(^3\)

Wellness is multi-dimensional: physical, spiritual, social, emotional, intellectual, occupational, environmental, and financial.

Physical Wellness involves the maintenance of a healthy body, good physical health habits, good nutrition and exercise, and obtaining appropriate health care.
