Re: In The Matter of a Complaint Filed by The New Jersey Association of Counties Challenging Provisions of the Criminal Justice Reform Act as an Unfunded Mandate
Docket No. COLM-0004-16

Dear Judge Sweeney:

This firm represents First Indemnity of America Insurance Company and various bonding agents (collectively the "Bail Parties")¹ with respect to the above-referenced matter. The Bail Parties respectfully request leave to appear as Amicus Curiae in this proceeding and submit this Letter Memorandum in support thereof (an original and nine copies are enclosed). In brief, the

¹ The additional Bail Parties include Richard Sparano of AA Bail Bonds Inc., Yadira Lagares of Across Da Street Bail Bonds, Mohammad Mahmoud of All Out Bail Bonds, Ian Burrowes of All USA Bail Bonds, Johara Samara of Apple Bail Bonds, Martin Melendez of Around the Clock Bail Bonds, Toya Harris of Ava Bail Bonds, Eric Kaplan of Bail Monster Bail Bonds, Nelson Gonzalez of Bandit Bail Bonds, Lou Turdo of Big Lou's Bail Bonds, Lorena Abarca of Community Bail Bonds, James Mozier of County Bail Bonds, LLC, Steve Krauss of Cutting Edge Bail Bonds, Chris Blaylock of EZ Bail Bonds, Keith Mourino of Got Bail? Bail Bonds, LLC, John Viruet of John's Bail Bonds, John Ostrander of Rapid Bail Bonds, Robert Rayford of Reliable & Affordable Bail Bonds, Kirk Shaw of Shaw Bail Bonds, and Antonio Roman of Roman's Bail Bonds.

Bail Parties submit that the Criminal Justice Reform Act of 2014 (the “Act”), P.L. 2014, C. 31, constitutes an unfunded mandate and is therefore unconstitutional for this reason and others (which the Bail Parties are litigating separately in the Superior Court).²

I. STANDARD FOR PERMITTING PARTIES TO APPEAR AS AMICUS CURIAE

Under the Rules of Procedure adopted by the Council on Local Mandates (the “Council”),³ specified parties may file Complaints, Answers, Requests to Appear as Amicus Curiae, and motions in the Council. See Council Rule 2(a)-(d). Complaints may be filed only by a County, municipality, school district, mayor, or County Executive (but also by the New Jersey Association of Counties and other parties, pursuant to N.J. STAT. ANN. § 53:13H-12). See Council Rule 5(a)(ii). However, any group or individual may file a request for permission to appear as Amicus Curiae:

A Request to Appear as Amicus Curiae shall be in writing and shall identify the Complaint with respect to which the group or individual seeks to appear, the identity of the group or individual seeking to appear, the issue it wishes to address, the nature of the public interest therein, the nature of the requester’s interest, and the requester’s involvement or expertise with respect to the issues involved.

Council Rule 7(b)(i).

The Council must grant the request for amicus status if a majority of its members find that the request is timely, that participation by the group or individual will assist in the resolution of the matter, and that no interested party will be prejudiced thereby. See N.J. STAT. ANN. § 52:13H-12(c).

² See Bergen County Bar Ass’n, et al. v. State of New Jersey, et al., Superior Court of New Jersey, Mercer County, Chancery Division, Docket No.: MER-L-16.

³ See <http://www.nj.gov/localmandates/rules/index.html>.

The U.S. Supreme Court, for example, permits a party to file an amicus brief on the sole condition that the filing party bring “relevant matter” to the attention of the Court. See SUP. CT. R. 37(1). Other courts allow third-parties to appear as amicus when their participation will assist the “complete and plenary presentation of difficult issues so that the court may reach a proper decision[.]” Alliance of Auto. Mfrs. v. Gwadowsky, 297 F. Supp. 2d 305, 307 (D. Me. 2003) (internal citations omitted), or when an issue of general public interest is at stake. See Russell v. Bd. of Plumbing Examiners, 74 F. Supp. 2d 349, 351 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (noting that the primary role of an amicus is “to assist the Court in reaching the right decision in a case affected with the interest of the general public”).

II. THE BAIL PARTIES READILY SATISFY THE STANDARD FOR AMICUS STATUS

In this instance, the Bail Parties respectfully submit that their application is proper, timely, and should be granted. First, given the complex nature of the Act and its effects on bail in New Jersey, their participation in this litigation will substantially assist the Council in analyzing the fiscal impact that the Act will have on Counties and municipal police departments throughout the State.

Bail bond agents or limited insurance producers (such as the Bail Parties) have traditionally assisted law enforcement in recovering bailed defendants who fail to appear in court when ordered; or have violated the terms of their release. When cash or surety bail is no longer imposed and the defendant becomes a fugitive, the duty of capturing such individuals – which has always been borne by bail bond agents, solely at the surety’s expense – will now fall to all levels of law enforcement, including the New Jersey State Police, County Sheriff’s officers, and municipal police departments, which will pose yet another unfunded mandate on local government (in addition to those itemized in the Complaint filed by the New Jersey Association of Counties).

To this end, the Bail Parties stand ready to provide testimony and evidence with respect to the roll that bail bond agents have played in this regard and to provide empirical data as to the number of defendants that have failed to appear at trial, despite bond; the number of hours it typically takes an experienced surety to capture a fugitive; and, the range of expense that the recovery process can entail in the ordinary course, which now will have to be borne, at least in substantial part, by Counties and municipalities. Under any analysis, the number of failure-to-appear cases can only increase now that surety or cash bail has been disfavored, if not eliminated altogether.

Second, the Bail Parties possess extensive knowledge regarding the nature, statutory guidelines, and history of surety bail, and their expertise will assist the Council in rendering an informed decision on these issues.

Third, as the Bail Parties have a substantial interest in the changes effected by the Act, they will reinforce and supplement the arguments that the New Jersey Association of Counties (“NJAC”) has asserted in this matter. They are not merely bystanders to these proceedings but have a great deal at stake.

Fourth, the role and availability of bail has played a vital role in the criminal justice process and unquestionably implicates the public interest. The continued viability of surety bail, and the corresponding appearance of defendants at trial, are undoubtedly essential to the public safety.

III. THE ACT CONSTITUTES AN UNFUNDED MANDATE

A. Prior Decisions by the Council: In the November 1995 general election, the voters approved an amendment to the New Jersey Constitution which, in effect, provides that if the State enacts a statute or imposes a regulation or rule, it must bear all costs incident to its enforcement or compliance therewith. See N.J. CONST., ART. VIII, § 2, ¶ 5. It is the mission of the Council on Local Mandates to uphold this constitutional principle. An unfunded mandate will be found when a state statute, regulation, or rule fails to “authorize resources, other than the property tax, to offset the additional direct expenditures required for the implementation of the law or rule or regulation[.]” Id.

The Council has not hesitated to find that state law constitutes an unfunded mandate when the evidence so warrants. For example, last year it struck down a law that required municipalities to equip police cars with video cameras, or that officers at least wear body cameras. See in the Matter of a Complaint Filed by Deptford Tp., Council on Local Mandates (Apr. 20, 2016).⁴ The new law was supposedly going to be funded by a $25 surcharge on individuals who had been convicted of drunk driving offenses. The Council found that the proposed funding mechanism was illusory, since the surcharges would generate woefully inadequate revenues to cover the probable cost of this equipment.

In another case, the Council held that an anti-bullying statute violated the unfunded mandate provision when it required every local school district to establish policies against bullying, sponsor prevention and response programs, and designate an anti-bullying coordinator, a school safety team, and a specialist who would deal with these matters (all of whom would have to be paid cash stipends to compensate them for their additional service). See In the Matter of a Complaint Filed by the Allamuchy Tp. Bd. of Educ., Council on Local Mandates (May 1, 2012).⁵ In brief, the Council found that the Legislature had merely paid lip service to its obligation to fund the statute, and that the school districts would have to draw upon local property taxes to pay the substantial expense of complying with the anti-bullying statute.

In In the Matter of a Complaint Filed by Roxbury Tp., Council on Local Mandates (Dec. 21, 2011),⁶ the Council struck down a regulation adopted by the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection, which required that outside dumpsters and other refuse containers exposed to storm water be covered at all times and that existing private catch basins be retrofitted in conjunction with any repair or reconstruction of private property. As in other cases, the Council found that the law put the municipality to complying with the law and did nothing to fund the cost of compliance.

Similarly, in In the Matter of a Complaint filed by Atlantic County, Council on Local Mandates, (Nov. 16, 2011), the Council invalidated an order issued by the Director of the State Division of Elections that required County employees, whose duties required them to access the internal components of voting machines, to attend a one-day training session, at the unreimbursed cost of $125 per employee. Again, the law fell because it failed to reimburse counties for the cost of sending their employees for training.

B. The Act Constitutes an Unfunded Mandate: The Bail Parties join in the position cogently set forth in the Complaint filed by the NJAC, substantially for the reasons alleged therein. Like the NJAC, they maintain that the Act – given the release-or-detain analysis that courts must now conduct – violates N.J. CONST., ART. VIII, § 2, ¶ 5, because it fails to include a funding mechanism to offset the substantial costs that this process is now imposing on local governments. The Act requires Counties and municipalities to now perform myriad law administrative functions, without allocating any funding for these mandates. For example, as noted earlier, law enforcement at all levels will have to find the resources to the recapture defendants who fail to appear – a function that, until now, bail bond agents have performed this function at their own expense. And, since the State and Counties have always been the beneficiaries of bail remissions, that source of revenue will also be lost in substantial part.

⁵ See <http://www.state.nj.us/localmandates/decisions/Allamuchy.html>.

⁶ See <http://www.state.nj.us/localmandates/decisions/Roxbury.html>.

Indeed, in its Directive to all law enforcement officials in the State, the New Jersey Attorney General has essentially conceded that the Act constitutes an unfunded mandate, admitting that compliance with its provisions will “strain existing law enforcement resources.” See Attorney General Law Enforcement Directive No. 2016-6, at 8 (October 11, 2016) (the “Directive”). The Attorney General admits that “[g]iven the breadth and scope of the impending reforms, police and prosecutors must work collaboratively to identify implementation problems and devise cost-effective solutions.”). Id. (emphasis added). The Directive also acknowledges that the Act will compel for prosecutors “to devote more resources to detention cases[.]” Id. at 10 (emphasis added).

The Attorney General is correct in this one respect, since his Directive will put municipalities and Counties to new fiscal burdens, which are detailed at length in the NJAC Complaint and will not be repeated here. Even so, we note the Directive requires that an Assistant Prosecutor, Deputy Attorney General, or designated police supervisor must be on-call and available twenty-four hours a day to assist in determining whether a defendant will be charged by complaint-warrant or summons. All involved will have to assist in preparing the risk assessments that must now be prepared – competently – within forty-eight hours of the defendant’s incarceration. See N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2A:162-25(b). This process will require prosecutors to perform multiple additional tasks, all subject to other deadlines (which, in turn, will compel Counties to hire additional staff). And municipal police officers will necessarily be entitled to overtime compensation to perform these duties.

The Directive also provides that an Assistant Prosecutor must attend the first appearance of a defendant who has been charged by complaint-warrant, which will impose further upon the prosecutor’s staff and resources. And the Directive states that a prosecutor may request that the police officer who made the arrest or handled the investigation must expedite the preparation of any reports or evidence that would bear upon the detention decision. This, of course, means that other police duties will go undone while these submissions are being prepared, which will further compound the cost of compliance. Finally, although all police officers must now undergo online training to comply with the new law, the Act does nothing to compensate local government for these expenses.⁷

However, ignoring the text of his own Directive, the Attorney General tells the Council that the NJAC Complaint has failed to plausibly allege that the Act poses fiscal burdens for local governments. See Letter Memo. at 31 (“But neither provisions of the Bail Reform Act, nor the act itself, require the hiring of any additional assistant prosecutors or sheriff’s deputies. There is no evidence presented in this complaint demonstrating that existing resources will be insufficient to meet the challenged provisions or that a financial hardship will befall the Complainants if the provisions at issue here are allowed to go forward.”). In moving to dismiss, the State of New Jersey argues that any debits in the financial analysis are outweighed by savings the Counties will realize under the new law – which, at this early stage of the proceedings, invites the Council to engage in pure speculation. Even so, their arguments defy common sense and the daily reality of the matter. The Bail Parties submit that the NJAC has pleaded substantial, plausible facts to support their funding premise – which may not be rejected on a motion to dismiss, when these well-pleaded allegations must necessarily be taken as true. A plenary hearing is warranted.

IV. THE EXCEPTION TO THE COUNCIL’S AUTHORITY FOR CONSTITUTIONAL MANDATES IS UNAVAILABLE IN THIS INSTANCE

Ordinarily, a mandate that implements a provision of the New Jersey Constitution, instead of one imposed by a statute, regulation, or rule, does not constitute an unconstitutional mandate. See N.J. CONST., ART. VIII, § 2, ¶ 5(c)(5); see also In the Matter of a Complaint Filed by the Tp. of Medford, Council on Local Mandates (June 1, 2009). Even so, this provision is in tension with the constitutional mission of the Council, which requires it to set aside statutes, regulations, or rules that impose unfunded mandates upon local government. See Art. VIII, § 2, ¶ 5(a); N.J. STAT. ANN. §§ 52:13H-1 to -22.

Recognizing this, the Council has held that the exemption for constitutional mandates must be construed narrowly, since an argument can always be made that any number of legislative actions might advance the general welfare in some respect, see ART. I, § 2 (“Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right at all times to alter or reform the same, whenever the public good may require it.”). See, e.g., Monmouth-Ocean Educ. Servs. Commission, Council on Local Mandates (Aug. 20, 2004) (“The purpose of the LMA is to protect units of local government from State-imposed unfunded mandates.”); see also In the Matters of the Complaints of the Mayors of Shiloh Borough and the Borough of Rocky Hill, Council on Local Mandates (Oct. 22, 2008) (holding that legislation must expressly reference and implement a specific provision of the Constitution, failing which it can be challenged as an unfunded mandate).

Were this not so, the exemption would swallow the rule. See Shiloh Borough, above, (opinion, Part III). Further, the Council has noted that competing provisions of the Constitution must be read in pari materia so as to harmonize them and give effect to both. Id.

Here, the Act was signed into law three months before the general election of November 2014, and, thus, was enacted without having any constitutional support in place. The ballot referendum that followed asked voters merely to approve amending the Constitution to deny release to violent or flight-prone individuals “in some situations.”⁸ The question asked voters not to create or confer any new rights but merely to authorize the denial of pretrial release in compelling cases.

The result of the referendum was the amended version of Article I, ¶ 11,⁹ which states only that the court must determine whether a defendant is too dangerous or flight-prone for ⁸ See <https://votesmart.org/elections/ballot-measure/2005/constitutional-amendment-to-allow-a-court-to-order-pretrial-detention#.WFiHTf5TH5o>.

⁹ The amended provision reads as follows:

No person shall, after acquittal, be tried for the same offense. All persons shall, before conviction, be [bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or presumption great] eligible for pretrial release. Pretrial release may be denied to a person if the court finds that no amount of monetary bail, non-monetary conditions of pretrial release, or combination of monetary bail and non-monetary conditions would reasonably assure the person's appearance in court when required, or protect the safety of any other person or the release. The provision is silent with respect to the role, if any, that sheriffs and local police departments will play in this process. The Bail Parties submit that even assuming the Act may properly impose on Judges and other State employees (such as members of the newly-created Pretrial Services Program), it may not create similar fiscal burdens for local governments when the Constitution has failed to expressly authorize or direct such action, and, thus, may not find support in an implied-powers argument. Most significantly, the Constitution states that its provisions must be construed liberally in favor of Counties and municipalities, which must get the benefit of the doubt on all issues of interpretation. See N.J. CONST., ART. IV, § 7, ¶ 11. Accordingly, any implied powers argument must be rejected.

In addition, the State seeks to avoid Council review on the basis that the enabling provisions of the Act authorize the Legislature to implement its provisions. These powers are not unlimited, and the Council has previously rejected unfunded mandates that have no more than a tenuous constitutional nexus. For example, in Monmouth-Ocean Educ. Servs. Commission, Council on Local Mandates (Aug. 20, 2004), the Council struck down a statute which required that all public school buildings be tested for radon gas, which the Commissioner of Education defended on the basis that school safety was essential to a “thorough and efficient education,” as guaranteed by ART. VIII, § 4, ¶ 1. Although the Commissioner sought refuge in ART. VIII, § 2, ¶ 5(c)(5), the Council found the constitutional argument was too attenuated to permit the statute to community, or prevent the person from obstructing or attempting to obstruct the criminal justice process. It shall be lawful for the Legislature to establish by law procedures, terms, and conditions applicable to pretrial release and the denial thereof authorized under this provision. [The deleted text appears in brackets; the new text is in italics.]

survive review and, in particular, that the Legislature had failed to make an “explicit legislative declaration that the radon testing mandate implements the Thorough and Efficient Clause[.]” Not surprisingly, the statute was annulled.

In Shiloh Borough, above, the Council rejected application of the constitutional exemption in a case where the Fiscal Appropriations Act of 2009 required rural municipalities that did not have their own police departments to bear a portion of the cost of having the State Police provide rural patrol services. The State defended the law on the basis that it was authorized by the Appropriations Clause, ART. VIII, § 2, ¶ 2. The Council rejected the State’s argument, finding that such an interpretation was too vague and attenuated to overcome the prohibition against unfunded mandates.

Not surprisingly, the Attorney General also argues that Article I, ¶ 11 insulates the Act from Council review. However, this argument and the new law cannot stand, because the Legislature – as in Monmouth-Ocean – failed to specifically reference the constitutional provision in question, and to declare that sheriffs, municipalities, and other law enforcement officers would be subject to its terms. Further, since Article I, ¶ 11 did not exist upon the inception of the Act, the law fails to include the necessary constitutional reference.

Further to the rule announced in Monmouth-Ocean, the Bail Parties submit that, if the Senate and Assembly wish to exempt a mandate from Council review on the basis that it was enacted pursuant to a constitutional mandate, the legislation: (a) must expressly declare that the Legislature is invoking the exemption; (b) find direct and express support in the Constitution, as opposed to that which is merely general, vague, or implied; and (c) must direct that even assuming the mandate fails to allocate sufficient revenue to enable a county, school district, or municipality to comply with its provisions, they will nevertheless be required to do so at their uncompensated expense. Even if the Council were unwilling to adopt an across-the-board rule in all cases, the deceptive manner in which Act became law warrants its application here. Failing an express declaration, the Legislature will – as it has done time and again – seek to shift fiscal burdens to local governments.

Moreover, the record in this matter is compelling, unique, and warrants heightened review. The Bail Parties submit that, given the irregular manner in which Article I, ¶ 11 was amended, the constitutional exemption should be construed even more narrowly in this case, since the Legislature won the amendment on less than full disclosure. The question and Interpretive Statement that appeared on the ballot sought authorization to eliminate the right to bail in compelling cases, which would lead the voters to think that the amendment was simply a get-tough-on-crime measure.¹⁰

This was, at best, a half-truth, for neither the question presented nor the Interpretive Statement: (a) informed the voters that the Legislature had already passed comprehensive bail reform legislation and intended to use the amendment to approve the new law retroactively; (b) summarized the provisions of the Act, their intended purpose or the rationale for their enactment; (c) informed the voters that the Act created a presumption against the imposition of monetary

Though the language of the question suggests a harsh stance on arrestees, mandating pretrial detention in some cases, the actual Criminal Justice Reform developed from this ballot measure is intended to reduce the number of individuals unnecessarily detained pretrial.

bail and, rather, had adopted a framework under which defendants could be released on their unsecured promise to appear at trial, even when facing lengthy prison terms upon conviction; (d) acknowledged that the new law would or might impose substantial fiscal and administrative burdens on county and municipal governments; and (e) disclosed that the new law allocated no funding for local governments. The voters, of course, could not have expected that they were authorizing any of these measures, let alone declaring a Bastille Day for defendants.

Under N.J. STAT. ANN. § 19:3-6, any public question that appears on the ballot must be presented in simple language that can be easily understood by the average voter, and be phrased in a way that clearly sets forth the true purpose of the question presented. The ballot must also provide a brief interpretive statement that explains exactly what the amendment is intended to accomplish and enhances the voter's understanding of the referendum presented. Id.; see also Gormley v. Lan, 88 N.J. 26, 37 (1981).

However, as put to the voters, the ballot question of November 2014 and its Interpretive Statement were wholly inadequate and materially misleading. Accordingly, the ballot violated N.J. STAT. ANN. § 19:3-6 and is invalid on that additional basis (as the Bail Parties are alleging in the parallel Superior Court action). Legislating via the constitutional referendum in this case should not become the new end run around the Council's authority or the prohibition against unfunded mandates. The Council was created because the Legislature and the electorate recognized that it and the Executive branch have an unfortunate history of failing to fund the legislation, regulations, and rules to which they have subjected local governments. But for the Council's intervention, they would have no choice but to raise property taxes to pay for these fiscal obligations.¹¹ To fulfill its constitutional mission, the Council should take the minimal step of requiring the Legislature to include such an express declaration in the law if it intends to invoke the constitutional exemption for this purpose.

Motions to dismiss are disfavored as a rule. See Printing Mart- Morristown v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 116 N.J. 739, 772 (1989). Decisions of the Council are final and not subject to appeal. See N.J. CONST., ART. VIII, § 2, ¶ 5(b); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 52:13H-18. Consequently, the Council grants motions to dismiss with great reluctance and only in the most compelling cases – which this is not. See In the Matter of a Complaint Filed by the Highland Park Bd. of Educ., Council on Local Mandates (Jan. 31, 2003).

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Bail Parties respectfully request that the Council on Local Mandates grant their request to appear as Amicus Curiae in this matter; that it deny the State's motion to dismiss the Complaint and allow the case to proceed to a plenary hearing; and that it hold that the Criminal Justice Reform Act of 2014, P.L. 2014, C. 31, is unconstitutional, null, and void on the basis that it is an unfunded mandate.

¹¹ Try as they may, however, the Counties will lack the ability to sufficiently increase taxes to pay for the costs of bail reform, since under P.L. 2010, c.44, they may not increase property taxes by more than two percent in any given year. The Act, therefore, has put the Counties in great fiscal distress.
