DMAVA solar energy program praised

By Sgt. Wayne Woolley, DMAVA Public Affairs Specialist

The Army's top alternative energy official said the New Jersey Department of Military and Veterans Affairs should be commended for its efforts to harness the power of the sun to cut energy costs and reduce the agency's dependence on the electrical grid.

Ronald Diehl said the Pentagon has already recognized the fact DMAVA has already created four high efficiency solar systems at its facilities. He said the solar project at the National Guard Training Center at Sea Girt should be a national model for the Department of Defense.

"Sea Girt drew a lot of attention and a lot of approval from people," Diehl told officials from DMAVA and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers at a meeting in Lawrenceville on Tuesday. "It was a picture perfect job. So good. So clean. So nicely done."

Diehl travelled to New Jersey because he wants to grant expedited funding approval solar expansions at the DMAVA facility in Lawrenceville and at Joint Forces Headquarters at Fort Dix.

Tapping alternative sources of energy is a Department of Defense priority – and the Pentagon's rationale goes far beyond dollars and cents.

"It's a matter of national security," Diehl said. "If the grid goes down, we will have a lot of problems meeting our defense needs."

That's why the Sea Girt training center is a model, Diehl said. In addition to two solar projects, the facility has won Defense Department backing for a $5.1 million wind turbine. All together, the alternative energy projects will generate far more electricity than activities at the installation require.

DMAVA Green

By Tech. Sgt. Barb Harbison, DMAVA Public Affairs

The next time you get a haircut, check to see if your salon or barber shop participates in the Matter of Trust charity. This organization recycles hair!

According to their Web site, <http://www.matteroftrust.org/programs/hairmatsinfo.html#1hair>, Phil McCrory, a hair stylist from Alabama, first discovered how hair can help. He was watching CNN coverage on the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill. He noticed the fur on the Alaskan otters completely soaked with oil. He began testing how much oil he could collect with the hair clipping from his salon. Phil then invented the hairmat.

With help from Matter of Trust, thousands of volunteers are deployed after oil spills to clean up beaches using the hairmats.

The US has over 300,000 hair salons and each cuts an average of a pound of hair per day. That leads to lots of hair and if it can soak up oil from spills instead of ending up in the local landfill – what a way to Reuse and Recycle.

You can log onto the Web site for more information and to find ways to encourage your salon to send their cuttings to help soak up oil spills.

Other ways to recycle or reuse your hair:

Compost it – throw it in your compost bin. While it takes time to break down, it is full of nitrogen.

Spread it around your garden – it will scare away many unwanted creatures such as snails, rabbits and raccoons. Added bonus: the protein and calcium in the hair will feed your plants.

Donate it – if it is longer than 10 inches, donate it to Locks of Love. Visit www.locksoflove.org for information.

Give it to the birds – place your clippings in bushes and tree branches as birds use many different materials to build their nests.

Keep Green!

Learn how to make your home greener

Representatives from Clean Water Fund and EarthShare New Jersey will present a seminar on what you can do to make your home “greener” and more environmentally friendly. Find out what chemicals in your home may be considered toxic and what you can do to eliminate these common hazards. The speakers will suggest more earth “friendly” products and cleaners that surprisingly do not cost more. You can discover how to save on energy consumption and other tips that will help save the environment. After the seminar a question and answer session will be held.

The Seminar will be held on Feb. 24, 10-11:30 a.m. in Conference Room A, DMAVA Central Office. Please contact Paul Serdiuk at 609-530-6878 or Paul.Serdiuk@NJDMAVA.State.NJ.US to reserve a seat.
