Spc. Stephanie Ospina left New Jersey a year ago as just another U.S. Soldier deploying to a foreign land in support of the Kosovo Force (KFOR) operations, but today she returned home with more appreciation for the freedom and rights entitled to U.S. citizens.

Ospina, a native of Colombia, was one of approximately 15 members of the N.J. Army National Guard's 350th Financial Management Detachment who deployed to Camp Bondsteel, Kosovo last April. Now, one year later, the N.J. National Guard welcomed the unit home during a ceremony at the Lawrenceville Armory, April 10.

The Army National Guard has been deploying units to Kosovo as part of the NATO-led international peacekeeping forces that are responsible for establishing a secure environment and freedom of movements for all citizens, irrespective of their ethnic origin within Kosovo.

During the year long deployment to the Balkans in support of KFOR 13, the unit provided core finance functions, including payroll for 950 Soldiers, 200 civilians and foreign nationals. They oversaw the disbursement of $885,000 in military entitlements, $7 million in contracts and services, and more than $6.5 million in casual pay, meal tickets, e-commerce, and other related transactions.

"Bottom line, that is a huge responsibility to disperse that kind of money, and do it so efficiently, so effectively and balance the books and come back home," said Maj. Gen. Glenn K. Rieth, Adjutant General of the N.J. National Guard.

During the ceremony, the unit commander, Capt. Margaret Bundesen thanked her Soldiers for rising to the task of an often thankless job.

"In finance we really don't get thanked a lot," she said. "We only get the nastiness when people don't get paid. We are the ones that feel it all because it's our job to fix it."

But despite the lack of understanding associated with their job, Bundesen said her unit maintained a positive moral throughout the deployment, relying on each other and maintaining a family-like cohesiveness.

She was also happy to report that during the deployment, every single E-4 and E-5 was able to complete Warrior Leadership Course, and become eligible for promotion to the next grade.

For Ospina, the celebration was about more than just returning to her family. It was about coming home to a country that allows so much freedom to its citizens. Freedoms which are not so readily available in other countries and which she was able to observe during her yearlong deployment.

"Now I can say I served my country," she said, as well as understands and appreciates the freedoms to which she is entitled.

NJ Youth ChalleNGe: It's a hairy ordeal

*Class 34 of the New Jersey Youth ChalleNGe program in-processed at the Mount Holly Armory on April 11 and for Jeff Washington, a contract barber, there was much work to do. The proprietor of Cutting Edge in Pemberton Township was on hand to help the male candidates meet the requirement that their hair be cut to their scalp – a marked change for many of the young men. For example, Justin Rehrig, 17, of Berlin, watched his Justin Bieber-like hair disappear in a matter of seconds. Then it was time for Dennis Alas, 18, of Elizabeth, to go from looking like Hurley from the television show Lost to Kojak. Finally, Augustin Cabrera, 17, of Elizabeth, lost any passing resemblance to Carlos Santana. Both Alas and Cabrera turned their locks over to DMAVA's Georgia Gregory, who was collecting hair for a donation to Locks of Love, a non-profit organization that provides hair pieces to financially disadvantaged children under age 21 who have suffered long-term medical hair loss from any diagnosis. ## It's raining money

Collecting rain drops can help you save

By Sgt. Wayne Woolley, DMAVA/PA

Believe it or not, there is a way to turn the rain running off the roof of your home into money.

And a group of DMAVA employees on Tuesday learned that it's possible to lower summertime water bills, thanks to a presentation from Jim Simon, the food and environment coordinator for Isles, the Trenton nonprofit organization that's responsible for all the small community gardens that have sprung up over the city.

The answer to saving the money and simply conserving water -- a resource that is already on its way to becoming scarce in many parts of the United States -- is rain barrels.

Developing a system that catches water running off rooftops in rain barrels and then rechanneling it to the yard when needed, could result in some serious reductions in a water bill simply by tapping into the tens of thousands of gallons of water that run off a typical home in a year.

Runoff for even an 800 square-foot roof, which would be found on a modest ranch home, can reach nearly 21,000 gallons of water a year. Proper harvesting the water for lawn and plants could result in the savings of at least 1,000 gallons of paid water use in the summer time.

To learn more about how to make rain barrels, check out this site provided by the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station of Rutgers University.

Museum to exhibit M1911

LAWRENCEVILLE, N.J. - The National Guard Militia Museum of New Jersey Lawrenceville Annex recently opened an exhibit to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the United States Armed Forces' adoption of the .45 caliber semi-automatic pistol.

Designed by John Browning and selected in 1911 as the standard sidearm for Soldiers, sailors, and Marines, the Colt M1911 was used in World War I, World War II, Korea, and Vietnam. Today, it remains in use by soldiers of elite Special Forces units.

"This sidearm is considered by many the greatest military sidearm ever produced," said retired Col. Jon Gribbin, the museum's resident expert on firearms. "In fact, at least 56 Medal of Honor recipients earned their medal while using the M1911 in battle."

The exhibit at the Lawrenceville Annex features several historic M1911 variants from the museum's extensive weapons collection. The display also contains a history of the pistol; a biography of the famous designer, weapon characteristics; a field-stripped weapon, holsters and web belts from WWII and Korea, as well as a clip and ammunition; an original manual; and a GI cleaning kit.

The Lawrenceville Annex is open on Tuesdays and Fridays from 9:00 am - 3:00 pm. Groups may call retired Col. Donald Kale, Curator Emeritus, at 609-530-6802 to arrange tours by appointment.
