MET TEAM ARMED WITH PERSUASION

The New Jersey Army National Guard's 50th Infantry Brigade Military Engagement Team is deploying for Operation Enduring Freedom and the most effective weapon in their arsenal will be their power of persuasion.

The 26 Soldiers will spend the next year coaching allied military forces on a variety of skills in the U.S. Central Command area of responsibility.

That means they'll do a lot of talking. And their commander, Col. Christopher Schrieks, says that's a good thing.

"We are from New Jersey and like to talk to people. What we are probably known best for is our ability to sell ice cubes to Eskimos," Schrieks said during the unit's departure ceremony at the Lawrenceville Armory on Nov. 1.

The Soldiers have now arrived at their mobilization station at Fort Hood, Texas, for mission specific training will go forward to conduct military-to-military engagements with regional partners. The team headquarters will be in Kuwait with members traveling to other countries to support foreign military training objectives.

Brig. Gen. Michael Cunniff, The Adjutant General of the New Jersey National Guard spoke of the troops' 412 years of collective military experience. Most of the team has deployment experience. For half of the Soldiers, this is their second or third deployment. For four soldiers, it is their fourth time. For the remaining nine, their first deployment.

Cunniff said the team members will be able to draw on their vast military experience – and more.

"Something the National Guard brings that isn't all that apparent when you see them here in uniform, is that they bring their civilian skills and other experiences to the fight," Cunniff said.

The deploying Soldiers include three state troopers, a corrections officer, and a school teacher.

DEPLOYING AND I KNOW THE HARDEST THING WE CAN ASK OUR FAMILIES IS TO HOLD DOWN THE FORT.

COMMANDER
50TH IBCT-MET

For Capt. Vincent Solomeno, of Hazlet Township, it will be his first deployment.

"I'm excited to do this mission. We have been training for this mission for several months and have developed a great team," said Solomeno, a former Fulbright Scholar, who serves as the fulltime curator of the National Guard Museum at Sea Girt.

Staff Sgt. Daryl Caulfield, a Marine

Corps veteran and Westampton police officer, said he also wanted an overseas mission. For Caulfield, he is hoping to unite with his son, Cpl. Adam Caulfield, who is serving in the region with the Marine Corps 11th Marine Expeditionary Unit.

Master Sgt. Rene Sales, a second time deployer, said he was looking forward to working with the foreign military.

"It's a really interesting mission. It's something new. The Army looks to the National Guard because we have the ability to bring an additional set of skills to the table and also at the same time relate to different cultures," he said.

As part of the ceremony the team's top noncommissioned officer, Sgt. Maj. Terrence Taylor was promoted to the rank of command sergeant major.

While Schrieks may have added a sense of humor to the emotional event, he too choked up when he talked of backbone of the Army being the family.

"This is the third time I am deploying and I know the hardest thing we can ask our families is to hold down the fort," he said.

The 50th IBCT MET team will be replacing the 32nd MET of the Wisconsin Army National Guard. The New Jersey team is a part of 1,000 New Jersey National Guard personnel deployed for contingency operations around the world.

AROUND THE STATE

ENERGY CONSERVATION TIP OF THE WEEK
Winter is coming; make sure your computer hibernates!

Did You Know?

Setting your computer to sleep or hibernate mode instead of using a screen saver during periods of inactivity will reduce electricity consumption. These modes reserve your computer state, which keeps your work intact for when you are ready to resume use. Just putting your PC to sleep at night can save you up to $24 every year.

Working at NJDMAVA, you can't shut down your work computer because of regularly needed updates, but you should turn off the monitor whenever possible.

If you would like more information about our energy and water conservation efforts, please contact Christopher Moore, Energy Manager at christopher.moore@dmava.nj.gov
