Warrant Officers wanted

Master Sgt. David Moore, Joint Force Headquarters Public Affairs Office

With a high percentage of New Jersey Army National Guard Warrant Officers soon eligible for retirement, the local corps of military technical experts are making a push to fill their ranks. State Command Chief Warrant Officer Guy Remig and Command Chief Warrant Officer of the Army National Guard Gary Ensminger, the Guard's top warrant officer, met with Army aviators and technical experts from around the state on Oct. 18, for a Warrant Officer Professional Development Seminar at the newly renovated Bordentown Joint Military and Family Assistance Center.

"It's important for us to come together at least once a year and put out the current information pertaining to them," Remig said.

Remig said the gathering was to allow warrant officers to talk about issues they face. One of the largest challenges is filling the warrant officer slots allotted to New Jersey. The state is authorized 149 slots and has only 119 filled. More than half of the current corps of warrant officers will be retirement eligible soon.

"For NCOs as they climb the career progression ladder they move higher in the command chain and away from the technical aspects of the career field itself. Becoming a warrant officer lets them stay in their career fields and become not only a subject matter expert but a leader," Ensminger said. "I can't think of a better way to serve being a Citizen-Soldier."

Some of the eligibility requirements to begin the process of becoming a warrant officer include individuals having a 110 grade in the general knowledge portion of the ASVAB; a high school diploma or GED; meet height and weight standards, as well as being able to complete the three-event APFT. Individuals considering the technical warrant officer can be appointed up to age 46. Aviation warrant officers must attend Initial Entry

Rotary Wing (IERW) before their 32nd birthday. Age waivers are considered for both.

From there, an interested Soldier will prepare an application packet for review by their respective Department of Army proponent for experience and leadership.

One of the largest challenges is filling the warrant officer slots allotted to New Jersey. The state is authorized 149 slots and has only 119 filled.

If selected, they will then attend a pre-Warrant Officer Candidate (Pre-WOCS) training program to prepare the candidate prior to attending the Warrant Officer Candidate School at Fort Rucker, Ala., or RTI over drill weekends and annual training periods. From there, the warrant officer attends the Warrant Officer Basic Course to become certified in their respective specialty.

"Right now New Jersey conducts its pre-candidate training program with the Officer Candidate program. We expect that to change in the future and run a standalone pre-warrant officer candidate training program," Remig said.

The Army National Guard has 40 career fields offering potential for NCOs to apply to become a warrant. For New Jersey, there are about 33 career areas that not only includes aviators but such technical fields as signal, intelligence, logistics and maintenance to name a few of the areas.

Warrant officers are highly specialized experts and trainers in their career fields. Warrant officers remain single-specialty officers with career tracks that progress within their field, unlike their commissioned officer counterparts who focus on increased levels of command and staff duty positions.

CE HELPS RAISE ENERGY AWARENESS

By Master Sgt. Andrew J. Moseley, 177th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

ATLANTIC CITY AIR NATIONAL GUARD BASE, N.J.--Civil Engineers planned and implemented energy saving measures here at the 177th Fighter Wing in support of the Department of Defense Energy Awareness Month of October.

Local energy saving initiatives include plans to decommission the central steam plant, fluorescent lighting ballast and bulb replacement, external light retrofit to light emitting diodes (LED) with lower energy consumption and longer life, as well as solar and wind power fixtures at the new running track.

"In 2011 the base had an energy audit where they looked at the whole base and made recommendations on energy improvements we could do on base," said Maj. John Koza, deputy civil engineering squadron commander.

"The results of this study were then taken to create the steam plant project. Installing four individual high-efficiency steam boilers will allow individual control and replace aging, leaky and poorly insulated steam lines providing a substantial decrease in our base's energy consumption," said Koza.

An ongoing initiative keeping electrician Peter Cote busy is the installation and retrofit of newer, higher efficiency T8 fluorescent bulbs and ballasts. The T8 lamps, rated at 32 watts, combined with the newer electronic style ballast, combine to realize a 20 percent energy savings.

"As the technology gets better, the bulbs last longer and require less maintenance," said Cote. "That's where you come up with savings also, not only in the bulb life and energy savings, but in the maintenance, too."

One of the other projects Koza is working on is with electrical smart meters.

"These electrical smart meters are connected to the incoming power in a building and let me download the energy use within a 30 day period," said Koza. "This allows me to identify certain facilities that are above normal and I can focus in on those and investigate the reasons for the high energy use."

Several new construction projects at the 177th over the last few years have reached the Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) certified Silver level, including the Wing Headquarters, 227th Air Support Operations Squadron and the Munitions Admin building. LEED certified buildings save money and resources while promoting renewable, clean energy.

With the Air Force spending $9 billion dollars on fuel and electricity in 2013, every Airman needs to do their part and make energy a consideration in all we do!

Hometown Huddle

New Jersey National Guard Soldiers teamed up with the New York Jets and the United Way to build a playground at the Montclair Child Development Center in Glen Ridge, N.J. Oct. 21, 2014. The playground was donated by the New York Jets and the United Way as a part of the National Football League's "Play 60" initiative which fights to end childhood obesity by encouraging children to play outside for at least 60 minutes each day. DEPARTMENT NOTES

ENERGY CONSERVATION TIP OF THE WEEK Put a brick in it!

Did You Know?

On average, a family of four using an older toilet will flush approximately 26,000 gallons of water down the toilet every year. If you still have a standard toilet, which can use 3.5 gallons or more per flush, you can save by filling your toilet tank with something that will displace some of the tank water, like a brick or a heavy glass jar.

Warning: Don't put a brick in your toilet tank unless you know it won't break down after a long time in water. The brick might dissolve and can clog the plumbing.

If you would like more information about our energy and water conservation efforts, please contact Christopher Moore, Energy Manager at christopher.moore@dmava.nj.gov
