The earlier Compendium of New Jersey Pine Barrens Literature (Buchholz and Good 1982) was developed to provide an easy-access reference system for policy-makers as well as the scientific community, and to provide a means for identifying areas of current research needs and thus provide directions for future scientific investigation. That Compendium provided an extensive data base for the natural sciences (botany, agriculture, forestry, geology and soils, hydrology, meteorology and zoology) but did not include the social sciences. This Compendium of Archaeology, Culture and History Literature of the New Jersey Pine Barrens is the result of the desire to expand the data base to include the much-needed information on the social sciences.

This Compendium, like its natural sciences counterpart, is an annotated bibliography of archaeological, cultural and historical literature on the New Jersey Pine Barrens. The primary sources of information were an extensive literature search using available bibliographies and reference citations from the literature, and the contributions of many individuals who provided information on more obscure references. The data base was compiled on the DEC-20 computer network and support facilities of the Center for Computer and Information Services, Rutgers University. Computerization of the data base greatly facilitates the compilation and continuous updating required to maintain a current data base and allows for maximum speed and ease of information retrieval.

During the year of compilation, approximately 800 literature citations were encountered, and the majority of these were reviewed by the compiler. Some citations were unavailable for review, and the information presented is as complete as possible. This data base will be continuously expanded and updated as new or previously missed information becomes available, and future editions of this Compendium will reflect these changes.
Acknowledgements

We wish to extend our sincere appreciation to the numerous individuals and agencies who contributed significantly throughout this project. We gratefully acknowledge the Victoria Foundation for providing financial support throughout the compilation, the New Jersey Pinelands Commission for their unyielding encouragement and for providing office and support facilities, and the Center for Computer and Information Services, Rutgers University, for providing computer time and support facilities.

We gratefully acknowledge Bud Wilson, Barry Brady (New Jersey Pinelands Commission), Somers Corson (Cape May County Historical and Genealogical Society), David E. Fairbrothers, Lee Merrill and Beryl Robichaud (Rutgers University), Ted Gordon, Mary Hufford (American Folklife Center, Library of Congress), Jean Jones (Maurice River Historical Society), Pauline Miller and Elizabeth Morgan (Ocean County Historical Society) for their constructive comments, critical reviews and contributions to the data base throughout the term of compilation. We sincerely appreciate the meticulous editorial reviews of the final draft by William Bolger and Norma Good.

INTRODUCTION

1. Bibliographic Sections.

This Compendium consists of annotated reference citations presented under six bibliographic sections: General References, Landscape, Aboriginal Settlement, Industries, Community and Family Life, and Cultural Resource Surveys and Inventories. In each bibliographic section, references are presented alphabetically by authors’ last names and chronologically by publication date. These sections are:

1. GENERAL REFERENCES contains multi-topic references and references which have a broader regional scope than the Pine Barrens.

2. LANDSCAPE contains travellers’ descriptions and general accounts of the landscape and natural history of the Pine Barrens, including maps and land deeds.

3. ABORIGINAL SETTLEMENT contains all references pertaining to the lives of successive groups of Pine Barrens inhabitants before European settlement, including language, customs, settlement patterns, religions, social structure and material culture.

4. INDUSTRIES contains historical accounts and descriptions of agricultural and industrial processes and other exploitations of Pine Barrens natural resources.

5. COMMUNITY AND FAMILY LIFE contains references which pertain primarily to the culture and society of the Pine Barrens inhabitants from first European settlement to the present, including religion, recreation, socio-economic structure, family life, government and military activities, ethnic settlement patterns and occupations, folklore, visual and performing arts, fraternal organizations. It lists biographies and diaries, government records, and local, county and regional historical accounts and collections.
Cultural Resource Surveys and Inventories lists studies which catalogue and assess prehistoric and historic sites within the Pine Barrens. Many of these works are products of governmental EIS (Environmental Impact Statement) and societal surveys.

Citations containing information appropriate for inclusion in two or more bibliographic sections are presented in full only in the most appropriate bibliographic section, and are cross-referenced in other sections by authors names, publication date and the bibliographic section in which the full annotated citation is presented.

II. Citation Format and Content.

Reference citations are presented in the following formats:

For Books:

Author(s) Name(s). Original Publication Date (Reprint Publication Date, if appropriate) Full Title. Original Publisher’s Name and City/State Address. (Reprint Publisher’s Name and City/State Address, if appropriate) Number of Pages.

For Periodical Articles:

Author(s) Name(s). Publication Date. Full Title. Publication Name, Volume Number: Inclusive Pages.

Every effort was made to review each reference first hand and thus the majority of citations are complete. For those few citations which were unavailable for review, the citation contains as much information as was available. Information (such as publication date) followed by a parenthetical question mark indicates that the information has not been verified.

Where appropriate, citations are annotated with additional information by:

(A) Location: a list of place names discussed or research sites used in the citation. For locations within the Pine Barrens proper, each location is followed by a parenthetical map index number(s) referring to the specific 7.5 minute U.S.G.S. topographic quadrangle(s) in which the place is located.

(B) Keywords: a list of selected subject keywords in addition to those provided in the citation's title.

(C) Synopsis: an abstract summary describing the general content of the citation.

III. Appendix and Indices.

One appendix and three indices are provided to supplement information retrieval. These are:

(A) Information Sources Appendix.

The primary focus of this Compendium is the published ("hard") literature of potential widespread availability - books, degree theses and dissertations, government publications of wide distribution, and journal, magazine and newspaper articles. The abundance, diversity and highly varied distributions of handwritten and typed manuscripts, personal letters, journals, diaries and correspondence, deeds and maps and other "soft" literature prohibited the inclusion of such materials in this data base. The exclusion of such information is not a reflection of its value; such sources of information represent very valuable resources. In this vein the Information Sources Appendix was compiled to provide an initial point for conducting searches of "soft" literature collections.

The Information Sources index is an alphabetical listing of institutions and societies having extensive manuscript collections and/or artifacts which may be of value to Pine Barrens researchers but which have not be included in this Compendium. In addition to the reference materials, the listed institutions and societies may be contacted to provide information regarding other collections related to, and individuals expert in, specific fields of research.

(B) Place Name - Map Unit Index.

Part I provides a list of the 7.5 minute U.S.G.S. topographic maps and their corresponding index number. A map of the Pine Barrens region illustrating the locations of each map is provided.

Part II provides an alphabetical listing of Pine Barrens place names and their corresponding map index numbers.
(C) Author Index.

The Author Index presents an alphabetical listing of each author cited in this Compendium and the bibliographic section(s) in which their work is cited in full. For junior authors (of multi-author citations), information is also provided to direct the user to the senior (first) author of the citation by a parenthetical "see" statement (e.g., "(see Worton, S.)").

(D) Keyword / Subject Index.

Subject keywords are presented in alphabetical order in FULL CAPITALS with appropriate subtopics and corresponding reference citations indented. Citations are referenced by author name, publication date and the bibliographic citation in which the full citation is given.

HOWARD, W. J. 1978. The Brandywine Conservancy, Inc.'s land

Keywords: Natural Resources Preservation

Synopsis: This paper reviews the Brandywine Conservancy's land preservation experience in the Brandywine Creek Watershed and other watersheds in southeastern Pennsylvania. The use of conservation easements as a land planning tool will be examined in detail to demonstrate how easements can be used to preserve an area's critical natural resources. The discussion of conservation easements will include an explanation of the process and an overview of the tax implications. Other potential land preservation techniques (public or private) will be reviewed to show how a conservation easement program can work in concert with other efforts and establish land conservation practices to serve a region such as the Pine Barrens.

KIER, C. Undated. See CULTURAL RESOURCE SURVEY citation.

Keywords: Land Management

Synopsis: The key lesson from the past several years of coastal management in New Jersey is the importance of decisions. Decision-making is both real as well as symbolic. Not to decide, that is, to delay a decision, is, in fact, to decide, as delay has its consequences, particularly in an area where development pressures nibble at the fringes of a yet largely undeveloped natural resources. The Pine Barrens require clear decisions today.

Keywords: Religions; Indian History; Natural History; Hotels; Transportation

Keywords: Indian Land Use

Synopsis: Recent finds within the archaeological research of New Jersey have indicated a need to more fully explore the environmental factors related to, and a function of, its prehistoric settlement patterns. Certain geologic landform features characteristic of Coastal Plain New Jersey (cuesta mounts and relict periglacial features) are providing insights to early prehistoric environmental adaptations. Our on-going archaeological survey has found a consistent correlation between these landforms and early aboriginal occupation during the Paleoindian and Archaic Periods, 12,000 to 4,000 B.P. Traditional concepts concerning early aboriginal land use are no longer applicable and fail to provide the necessary predictive approaches to the other prehistoric settlement areas. Alternate models, established through landform studies in southern New Jersey, are now revealing a much more complex early cultural history than was once supposed.

Keywords: Indian Settlement Patterns

Synopsis: Earlier archaeological research and historic documentation have both contributed to the belief that the Pinelands were unoccupied, or at best, sparsely settled in prehistoric times. This paper reports the results of a recent survey of over 1,000 known prehistoric sites in the Pinelands, as ecologically and federally defined. The results of this current survey clearly point out that the formerly prevailing concepts of aboriginal settlement in the Pinelands seriously underestimate not only the frequency of site occurrence but also the range of habitats utilized by the native populations of the region. The extent to which the perceived patterns of aboriginal occupation of the Pinelands relate to environmental factors or to sampling biases remain to be analyzed in detail. It is obvious that renewed archaeological research and a serious conservation effort are urgently needed.

Synopsis: This article characterizes what is generally known about Late Woodland lifeways in southern New Jersey. From this depiction generalizations about Late Woodland occupation of the Pinelands can be cautiously drawn in full anticipation that future research will significantly modify current ideas about the prehistoric settlement in this region. Elements considered in this paper include the nature and distribution of Late Woodland sites, the culture-history and chronology of the Late Woodland as it is presently known, the kinds and quality of past archaeological activities in this region, the biases and limitations of past research, and the kinds of information and research needed to insure the intelligent and responsible management of Late Woodland and other archaeological resources in southern New Jersey.

Keywords: Prehistoric Sites; Settlement Patterns; Iroquois Indians; Indian Activities

Synopsis: Though sites were probably not large in Pre-Woodland or Woodland times in the Pine Barrens, the area was thoroughly exploited and inhabited by Lenapes and their predecessors. Knowledge of contact period and pre-contact period environmental conditions provides a basis for predicting the location of archaeological sites in the area. This approach has already proven productive and should be tested further. At least 1200 sites have been located. Vast areas of the Pine Barrens have never been observed. If no avocational collector lived in the area or there were no roads or streams to expose prehistoric deposits, the materials may still lay undisturbed. Our knowledge of aboriginal exploitation of the environment could be greatly expanded by consideration of this unique area.

Location: Savich Farm Site (5)
Keywords: Indian Artifacts

Synopsis: The Savich Farm Site is Marlton, New Jersey, has come into national prominence because of the discovery of a prehistoric Indian culture there. This paper is an attempt to define the social and economic aspects of this culture and to explain the archaeological time frames within the Savich Farm site. Indian occupation of New Jersey began about 10,000 B.C., and patterns changed as their environment, population pressures and outside influences changed. Archaeologists have divided these 12,000 years into time periods, selecting what seemed to be important social and economic stages. The first period is the Paleo-Indian epoch; the second is the Archaic and the third, the Woodland Epoch. The final period is called the Federal Period or the decimation and acculturation of native populations after European settlement. The term "Archaic" is defined as a cultural time period and its social and economic importance will be outlined briefly. Archaic epoch is thoroughly represented across both the northern and southern portion of New Jersey. Several sites in southern New Jersey will be used as examples. One important site, which contains all archaeological time periods, is the Savich Farm site located in Burlington County near the town of Marlton. One component of the archaic epoch was singled out through excavation which discovered hundreds of archaeological features such as house patterns, cooking features, caches of tools and an extensive late archaic cremation cemetery containing the remains of 52 individuals. This site has provided information on much needed social and economic aspects of a cultural group now defined as the Koens-Crispin Phase. It has redefined previously excavated sites and corrected outdated archaeological interpretation. The importance of this site was recognized and protected by the Green Acres Act, the National Register of Historic Places, and it lies in the Pinelands National Reserve.

Keywords: Pinelands Cultural Society; Pineys; Musical Traditions

Synopsis: I intend to offer some general insights into the sociocultural role of the Pinelands Cultural Society in those Pine Barrens communities from which it draws most of its supporters - primarily the Barnegat Bay townships of Lacey, Ocean, Barnegat, Stafford, Eagleswood, Little Egg Harbor and Bass River, all of which are situated along the easternmost edge of the Pinelands. My approach will be two-pronged: first I would like to place "country" and traditional folk music performance of the bayfront Pinelands community in historical perspective by tracing the roots of the Pinelands Cultural Society; second, drawing on insights from both folklore and cultural geography I will discuss how the activities of the Pinelands Cultural Society reflect a conscious use of the Piney musical heritage in arguing for the preservation of the traditional value system of the community. Quotes drawn from society leaders Janice Sherwood and Gladys Eayre of the old-timey group the Pineconers, as well as from society members Kurt Keiwel and Jean Tenney will be utilized in this paper.

Synopsis: The intent of this paper is to celebrate and to stimulate study of the Southern Pine Barrens by drawing attention to two aspects of its geography. The first aspect is physical: The Southern Pinelands is an archipelago of islands and peninsulas among the vast swamps of the interior. The second is cultural: Due to the meagre fertility of the South Jersey archipelago it was densely settled only during the great immigrations of the last hundred years. The land was cleared for agriculture almost within living memory and became, and continues today, a patchwork of immigrant ethnic settlements.

Synopsis: General discussion of the various social and cultural parameters which should be considered in the development of a preservation plan for the Pine Barrens.

Locations: Washington Township (25)

Keywords: Piney Family; Social Structure; Religions; Literacy; Personal Finances

Synopsis: This is a study of a rural industrial society in the nineteenth century from its economic peak in the 1840's to its economic demise in the late nineteenth century. Myths about the ignorance, poverty and backwardness of rural social groups is common, especially about the residents of the Pine Barrens. By using census data, analyzing ecological relationships and describing a family’s history, this study dispels such myths and suggests that the success of Piney society depended both on socio-cultural relationships and on the people's abilities to exploit and conserve their resources. In order to sustain a viable culture in the face of adversity, people of the Pine Barrens - the Pineys - needed elements of flexibility to adapt and elements of stability to endure. Flexible elements included adjustments in the size of population, in household structure and in their exploitation of the natural resource base. Elements of stability included relatively homogeneous cultural and religious backgrounds, high rates of literacy and a strong reliance on family structure. The interrelationships of Piney society and the resource base are of critical importance in this study. The Piney's ability to exploit all available environmental resources from timber and agriculture to peat moss, fish and game complemented the ability of the resource base to regenerate itself. The balance Pineys achieved between themselves and their resources through a system of positive feedback loops, thus ensured the maintenance of their social and cultural integrity until the present.

Primary subject keywords are presented in the far left margin in FULL CAPITALS; subtopics and corresponding reference citations are indented. Reference citations are given by first author's last name, publication date and bibliographic section in which the full citation is presented. Parenthetical numbers following place name keywords are the map unit index numbers of the 7.5 minute U.S.G.S. topographic quadrangles in which the place is located.
